FLOOR DEBATE

February 22, 2002 LB 824

SENATOR FOLEY: ...I think...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...precise?

SENATOR FOLEY: I think the term "intentional child abuse" is well understood.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And it's directed against some other child.

SENATOR FOLEY: That's correct.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: That's all that I will ask you at this point. I would like to ask Senator Brashear a question or two, if he will respond.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Senator,...

SENATOR BRASHEAR: Yes.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: ...would you respond?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Brashear, I'm in the realm now of "overbreadth," something being overbroad. And I will take you to page 3 in line 12, where we're talking about a sudden quarrel with any person. You do not think that term "any person" is overbroad, is that correct?

SENATOR BRASHEAR: I do not.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And I'm not being argumentative. That's why I'm not going to...when you answer I'll let it be. In line 11, we see the word "kills" preceding the words "an unborn child", so that the term would be "kills an unborn child". Then in line 12 we have "causes the death of an unborn child". What's the difference between "kills" and "causes the death of"?

SENATOR BRASHEAR: Kills is the action of the perpetrator, him or herself causes the death. It can theoretically, since we're talking about unborn child unintentionally, can theoretically be a passive as opposed to an active act.
